

Explosives/IED Awareness

Connecticut Fire Academy

2010 HazMat Seminar Series
Wednesday • December 8, 2010

This program is designed to make the First Responder aware of the potential threats and dangers of Explosives and Improvised Explosive Devices, known as IEDs; and the impact on Response and Mitigation in today's world. The four instructors are all members of the New Haven/Yale Police Bomb Squad and work very closely with the NHASH regional Hazardous Materials Response Team as well as other responders. In the class, students will receive an overview of Explosives, IEDs, Clandestine Labs, Bomb Threats and Booby Traps, Emergency Response Procedures, Bombing Investigations, Large Vehicle and Suicide Bombers as well as a K-9 Demonstration.

Lieutenant Michael Patten is the Emergency Services Coordinator and Special Weapons and Tactics (SWAT) Commander for the Yale University Police Department. Lt. Patten is certified by the Connecticut Police Officers Standards and Training Council as an instructor in the areas of, Critical Incident Management and Command Post Operations, Firearms and Tactics. Lt. Patten holds a Bachelor of Science Degree in Criminal Justice from the University of New Haven and has over 37 years of police experience.

Assisting Michael Patten are Officer Charles Hebron Police K-9 Officer/Bomb Technician with the Yale University Police Department; Officer Joseph Tempesta Police Officer/Bomb Technician with the Yale University Police Department and Officer Jason Salgado Police K-9 Officer/Bomb Technician with the New Haven Police Department.
