Training Today's Fire Service

Presented by: Chief Douglas Cline

Chief Douglas Cline

Training today's fire service is different from even 10 years ago. This program is designed to give key training personnel the critical skills and attitudes to affect change in your training programs. The need to motivate students and instructors alike is paramount in affecting change in the current fire service. Training is the highway to cultural modification.

Training is about Attitude!!! Training has evolved in the fire service over the years ... or at least for some it has. So what type of attitude does your department, officers and instructors have towards training? If your department is struggling with this issue of TRAINING, then you can't miss this program as you will walk away from the class with an understanding of how technology is affecting fire training in the contemporary fire service, the demands of regulations and requirements for fire service training and at least a year's worth of ideas for training and innovative ways to deliver that training. You will not want to miss this high energy/power packed program as some of the latest and greatest techniques of instructor methodology and course delivery will be presented.

Course #09227, Course Fee $55, All classes held at the Connecticut Fire Academy
