

The Windsor War Memorial (bronze eagle) was erected to honor those soldiers and sailors who fought in defense of the town from the date of its settlement in 1633 to the date when the memorial was erected in 1929. The monument was designed by Evelyn Longman Batchelder. Her husband was Nathaniel Horton Batchelder, headmaster at the Loomis Institute (currently known as the Loomis Chaffee School). Evelyn donated her services in creating cherished artistic and historic memorials. This was just one of many. The Windsor War Memorial is emblematic of freedom and fortitude. Beneath the wreath of leaves is the statement "TO THE PATRIOTS OF WINDSOR" to whom this is dedicated. This monument stands on the Windsor Town Green at 275 Broad Street near the Windsor Public Library.

Memorial Fireplace. Located at 235 Palisado Avenue, this fireplace was originally built on American Legion grounds, but is now on private property. It was donated in 1945 by Edward and Ralph Peters in memory of their sons and all Gold Star Casualties of WWII.

Vietnam War Veterans Plaque. This wooden plaque, which was designed and carved by Windsor resident Alexander B. Hooker, can be found hanging in the lobby of the Windsor town hall at 275 Broad Street. It is dedicated "In memory of the patriots of Windsor who gave their lives in the Vietnam Conflict" and lists the names of those veterans.

The Deerfield Globe Standing at 3-1/2 feet tall atop a cement base, this memorial was erected in the 1950s by the Deerfield district of the Town of Windsor in honor of all WWII Deerfield veterans. The globe is composed of 144 hand-carved wooden blocks. The globe originally had an honor roll of approximately 50 veteran names that were placed on the globe's surface with metal lettering. However, due to wear and tear through the years, the names have since fallen off. In 1993, the 'globe' was given a face lift and a new bronze honor roll plaque was installed at its base with an inscription of those names to again give honor to all of Deerfield's WWII veterans.

The Windsor Veterans Memorial Cemetery is located on East Street near the Farmington River. The monument is made of different sized, multi-colored stones. Resting on top of the monument is a large bell that was originally given to the town in 1879 by Mrs. Loomis Hayden, wife of the Honorable Sidney Hayden. The bell was discovered by a wrecking crew in the bell tower of the old town hall and was rescued and placed on this monument as a memorabilia piece. The plaque in the center of the stone reads "In memory of all veterans who have served to preserve our American heritage, Donated by Windsor Troop 149, Boy Scouts of America." At the base of the monument is a marker that reads "Dated April 1968."

Thirty-five names can be found on the bronze plaque that is mounted on a carved piece of granite stone. The inscription on the plaque reads as follows: “In Memory of the GOLD STAR CASUALTIES OF WORLD WAR II.” The term “GOLD STAR” began when families would place a gold star in their window after they lost their son(s) to the war.
