Since the Berlin Wall came down and China and India embraced robust market capitalism, "globalization" has greatly accelerated. Change is coming in "Internet time", and economic changes in the next 20 years will significantly alter people's lives in countless ways.

Today, 11% of the world's people living in the US and Europe produce 40% of the world's GDP. This economic leadership is being challenged as never before. We will explore the dimensions of Trans-Atlantic trade and investment, and what Washington and Brussels (and Rome, London, Paris, Madrid...) must do to remain competitive in the 21st Century.

Yes! I will attend the luncheon and program on Trans-Atlantic Competitiveness Wednesday, October 18, 2006 at 11:45a.m.
