

OPM – Annual projection of the prison population

Based on historical trends data and an analysis of the operational parameters at the Department of correction, OPM believes that the prison population will decline at a moderate pace over the coming 12 months. On February 1, 2012, the prison population in Connecticut stood at 17,261. According to this projection, the prison population on February 1, 2013 is expected to be 16,793, an overall decline of 2.7%.

