In April, the Office of the Victim Advocate and the Connecticut Coalition against Domestic Violence (CCADV) were presented with a $2,000 donation from the Brooklyn Correctional Institution’s Brooklyn Cares Program. The program, run by the Department of Correction (DOC) and five prisoners, sells snacks to inmates and the proceeds are donated to organizations.

The Brooklyn Cares donation helped supplement the OVA’s funding of the update and printing of 10,000 Domestic Violence Best Practices Cards to be distributed to all police departments across the state.

The Connecticut Alliance to End Sexual Violence formerly known as CONNSACS has been the state’s leading voice to end sexual violence for over thirty years. The OVA is highlighting their work in this issue and interviewed Laura Cordes, Executive Director of the Alliance.

Ms. Cordes has worked in the anti-sexual violence movement since 1999 and is the executive director of Connecticut Alliance to End Sexual Violence.

With over 20 years’ experience in public policy and victim advocacy, Ms. Cordes has advanced numerous women’s health care initiatives and has been instrumental in the adoption of legislative and administrative policies that have improved the immediate response to victims of sexual violence throughout the health care, criminal justice, and higher education systems.

About The Alliance

For over thirty years, we have been the state’s leading voice to end sexual violence. We have a committed staff and statewide coalition of nine community-based sexual assault crisis programs. Together we provide survivor-centered advocacy and services for women, men, and children. We drive public policy efforts that improve the response to victims and survivors and to increase offender accountability. Through our prevention education and training programs we are changing harmful cultural attitudes and empowering communities to take action to prevent sexual violence. We do not do this work alone and are fortunate to have many state and community partners who work with us to address sexual violence.

What prompted the name change of the organization?

Our new name, Connecticut Alliance to End Sexual Violence (The Alliance) reflects who we are, what we do, and what we aim to do. Changing our name came about as a collective desire among our member programs, partners, staff, board and many survivors to adopt a name that best represents the scope of our work, our partnerships and our goals. While we have changed our name, our mission remains the same: to end sexual violence and ensure high-quality, comprehensive, and culturally competent sexual assault victim services.

What obstacles do you face?

We never turn a victim away. Though we have a large and growing network of community partners, we are often stretched beyond capacity to reach and meet the needs of all survivors. Funding from individuals as well as municipal, state and the federal government is vital to upholding and expanding no cost services and advocacy. Amidst the growing state deficit, it remains challenging for our non-profit network to secure the funds needed to meet the growing demand for services for the child, adolescent and adult victims who turn to us for help. Individuals can help by organizing an event, volunteering at a member program or making a contribution.

Where can CT improve?

We are finally having rich state and national discussions about the problem of sexual assault and what we need to do to end it. We have passed some strong state laws in recent years including one of the nation’s most comprehensive laws addressing campus sexual violence, as well as those which establish civil protective orders for sexual assault victims, clear time frames for the transfer and testing of all sexual assault evidence collection kits, and a requirement for all schools to provide K-12 sexual abuse awareness and prevention programming. These are great steps forward, but we still have work to do to reach all survivors especially those from historically marginalized communities who experience sexual violence at higher rates, and often face more barriers to accessing services and system for healing and justice. We need to counter victim blaming and to change the attitudes that allow offending behavior. Our prevention programs and trainings, which help people to learn about the ways that they might inadvertently contribute to cultural factors that normalize sexual violence and what they can do to help prevent it in their communities, are one way to achieve this.

What do you want our readers to know most?

Two things. First, sexual violence is traumatic for survivors and impacts them in numerous ways. How we respond matters and can make the difference in whether or not a survivor feels supported and can access the services they deserve to rebuild the trust and control that has been robbed from them. Our hotlines are available to survivors and their family members and friends 24/7. Even if it happened a long time ago, even if the offender was someone the victim knew, even if the survivor never told anyone, help is available and we are here to help.

Second, sexual violence is not inevitable. It is preventable and everyone has a role in ending it. Professional development and prevention education and awareness programs are available for organizations and individuals. Available Trainings

The Office of the Victim Advocate provides training sessions geared toward raising awareness about the rights and services available to victims of crime in Connecticut. Some training topics include:

- The Office of The Victim Advocate: This training focuses on the role and duties of the agency. Highlights the laws regarding crime victims’ rights and the issues they face in the criminal justice system.

- U & T Visa Training: This training focuses on the process of completing and certifying the necessary paperwork for U & T Visa requests. This training is for attorneys, and police officers that act as “certifying” officers for the purpose of processing U & T Visa requests.

- Orders of Restitution: This training outlines eligibility requirements and the process to request an order of restitution from the court.

- Senior Community Awareness Training: This training focuses on issues senior communities may face and ways to prevent becoming a victim of crime.

- Legislative Aide Training: This training focuses on the services and resources available to Connecticut crime victims. This training is for legislative aides and provides resources that can be shared with constituents.

- Internet safety: This training addresses sexting, bullying and online harassment. Learn tips to help educate youth regarding the serious nature and risks associated with participation in such activities.

Did you know?

If you are a crime victim you might receive a phone call from the public defender, investigator or an attorney representing the defendant to ask questions or seek input as it relates to the criminal matter at hand. You do not have to speak to them if you do not want to.

Summer months are here! Make sure to take steps to protect yourself and loved ones from being a possible target!

Opportunity makes the thief!
PROTECT YOURSELF!
- Keep all doors locked!
- Trim Bushes and trees from entries and lower windows
- Get to know your neighbors
- Don’t leave valuables in plain sight
- Don’t advertise large purchases at the curb
- Report suspicious activity

Monitor your children's internet activity:
SHARE THESE SMART TIPS! Talk to your children about internet safety!
- SAFE: Keep safe by being careful not to give out personal information—such as your full name, email address, phone number, home address, photos, or school name—to people you are chatting with online.
- MEETING: Meeting someone you met online can be DANGEROUS! If someone is pressuring to meet tell an adult.
- ACCEPTING: Accepting emails, instant messages or opening files of picture or texts from people you don’t know or trust can lead to problems—these messages may contain a virus!
- RELIABLE: Information you find on the internet may not be true, or someone online may be lying about who they are.
- TELL: Tell your parent or trusted adult if someone or something makes you feel uncomfortable or worried. This can be inappropriate messages, photos or online bullying.

Vehicle Safety!
- Keep vehicle locked at all times
- Don’t leave any valuables in plain sight
- Make sure the windows are up enough to prevent any person from unlocking your car.
- LOOK before you LOCK! Be sure not to leave any pets or children unattended in a car especially on a hot day.
