LEGAL UPDATE

CHRO Attorneys are appearing in courts across the state in Housing election cases and it seems that the number of Housing elections is increasing. In accordance with Connecticut General Statutes Section 46a-83 after a finding of reasonable cause to believe discrimination has occurred in a housing case, either party may elect a civil action in lieu of an administrative hearing. If a party makes an election, a CHRO Attorney shall commence an action in Superior Court within ninety days of receipt of the election. CHRO attorneys are currently appearing in Housing election cases in Hartford, New Haven, Litchfield, New London, Norwich, Bridgeport, Norwalk and Torrington. Two cases: CHRO v. Litchfield Housing Authority and Arnold v. Forvil are currently slated to be argued before the CT Supreme Court this spring by CHRO Attorneys Michelle Dumas Keuler and Robin Fox, respectively.

The Regional Manager is very concerned with educating the public about their civil rights through the intake and investigation process and also believes that community forums where information is disseminated to the public is helping the CHRO to meet its mission of eliminating discrimination. The fiscal year for the Region begins in July and since that time the Region has received 268 complaints, retained 232, closed 198 cases and settled cases in the amount of $772,221.76.

Robin Kinstler Fox participated in the Dr. Martin Luther King Celebration sponsored by the Department of Environmental Protection at the Peabody Museum in New Haven on January 16th and 17th.

The CHRO booth was visited by thousands of attendees during the two day period. Literature, posters, activities and coloring pages related to civil rights and notable civil rights leaders were distributed to the public. The CHRO has many dedicated employees whose background and experiences led them to work in the area of civil rights. The many faces of CHRO are diverse, dedicated, forward thinking and believe in the mission of the agency to eliminate discrimination through education, enforcement and advocacy. One of the faces, Renee Sonnenblick, pictured above is an HRO Representative in the Capitol Region and the daughter of Holocaust survivors. Renee’s mother was sent to Auschwitz concentration camp during WWII, while her father was sent to a Siberian Labor camp, both being punished for being Jewish. Renee’s parents survived the Holocaust and left her with a strong desire to do her part in trying to rid the world of harmful discrimination. We can change the mind of one person at a time and make them believe in fairness and equality. Renee said, “To some, it may not seem like much, but I believe that our work is like a stone thrown into a still pond, where the ripples move outward and effect larger changes in Connecticut.”

One of my duties as a CHRO Representative is to help draft people’s discrimination complaints. A Complainant asked Renee during an intake, if it was hard listening to people’s complaints for the whole day. Renee smiled and said, “my parents survived the Holocaust, my motivation to help people comes from them.”

CHRO Attorney, Kim Jacobsen identifies with Renee Sonnenblick’s experience. “I was motivated to work at the CHRO due to discrimination growing up”, she said. “I grew up in upstate New York and my family was one of the only Jewish families in our neighborhood. When I was a kindergartner on the school bus older classmates discovered I was Jewish and asked if I had horns.” Neighborhood kids painted a swastika on my family’s lawn.” As my colleague Renee Sonnenblick expressed, my experiences influenced my decision to fight against discrimination. “I was taught early on to be part of the solution and to work to end unlawful discrimination,” she said. My Great-aunt and Great-uncle were involved in the founding of the holocaust museum in Washington DC.
